Man, 30, dies after car rolls

EJECTED A 30-year-old Hatchet Lake man is dead after a single-car crash on Old Guysborough Road in Lower Sackville early yesterday morning.

The victim was the passenger in a car with another man from the Hatchet Lake area around 2:30 a.m. when the driver lost control and the car rolled over in a ditch.

Neither was wearing a seatbelt and both men were thrown from the car.

The driver of the car sustained minor injuries and the passenger was found dead at the scene.

RCMP are still investigating the cause of the crash but say drugs and alcohol were not a factor.

Staff Sgt. Peter McTiernan said excessive speed may have been involved and there was heavy fog in the area at the time.

A hot one, but no record-setter

CLOSE It was a gorgeous day yesterday, but it wasn't a record-setter.

Yesterday's high temperature was 27 C. According to Environment Canada, the hottest it's been in Halifax was 28.8 C. That was in 1988. The coldest July 6 was in 1953, when it was a chilly 7.8 C.

Soaring towards the record books

Team designing glider for championships Aug. 3 in Ottawa

PAUL MCLEOD

"Building a hang-glider seemed pretty easy when we started. But let me tell you, it's not. It is way harder than it looks."

Ryan Anderson, team captain

When you're building a flying machine from scratch, sometimes you've got to scrounge through your basement for supplies.

So when Jeff Sheppard showed up at his team's Mount Uniacke base he brought some tubing and siding he found in the hopes of fixing their hang-glider. The team has until the end of the month to design a glider for the Canadian Red Bull Flugtag championships August 3 in Ottawa.

"Building a hang-glider seemed pretty easy when we started. But let me tell you, it's not. It is way harder than it looks," said team captain Ryan Anderson.

Flugtags involve teams of up to five people pushing a homemade, human-powered flying machine off a nine-metre platform over a lake. Whichever machine makes it the farthest before hitting the water wins.

The local team of Sheppard, Anderson, David MacKinnon, Evan Boudreau and Matt Kervin has their sights set on the world record of 47 metres, set last year in Nashville. That team launched a glider off of a two-metre platform.

"We figured if we take that same hang-glider design and raise it higher, there's no reason why we can't go further," said Boudreau. "So we decided to make a Maritime theme out of it.

What's a high structure we could launch something off of? A lighthouse."

And so, by learning what they could from pictures and youtube videos, Flighthouse was born. So far they're in the early testing stages and the lighthouse platform has yet to be built. But the team believes if they put the work in, the world record could be theirs.

Another local team from Prospect — made up of Joel Babin, Lee Babin, Martin Benvie, Greg Kerr and Matt Smelson — are also heading to Ottawa in August and are so far keeping their "unique" design a secret.

No buses for beach goers

Sun lovers forced to drive congested route to Rainbow Haven Beach

ROBIN YOUNG
robyn.young@metronews.ca

Hundreds of revelers soaked up the sun at Rainbow Haven Beach yesterday and all of them got there by car.

No buses stop anywhere near the popular summer hot spot.

Cars lined both sides of Cow Bay Road for several hundred metres leading up to the beach entrance and at least a kilometre past it.

After a long drive from Westphal, Tysha Brown, 17, and her friend Selena Poole, 17, said it would be helpful if HRM had a bus that traveled to the beach

Tysha Brown, left, and her friends Selena and Tori Poole walk past dozens of cars lined up along the road leading to the Rainbow Haven Beach parking lot yesterday. They said they would take advantage of bus service to the area if it existed.

throughout the summer months.

"Either it could be a Metro Transit bus or an actual (shuttle) bus for out here," said Brown.

"It would be easier to get out here; some kids don't have cars."

They said they would definitely use the bus to get to the beach if they could, citing convenience as one of the reasons, but also the cost of gas and environmental awareness.

Park attendants Josh Freeman and Patsy Eddy with the Department of Natural Resources agreed that a bus or shuttle system would reduce the congestion on Cow Bay Road during the warmer months.

Freeman and Eddy were sweating it out at the parking lot gate as cars lined up waiting to get into the park. They let two or three cars enter about every 15 minutes.

Freeman said police are kept busy handing out parking tickets on hot days and the number of cars lining the roads and parking lot are a safety hazard.

"You can't get a fire truck in here," he said.

Deputy Mayor Stephen Adams will request additional basic bus service at City Council this week for underserved areas such as Eastern Passage, Waverley, Lucasville, Williamswood, Harrietsfield and Sambro, but he said a bus that services the beaches specifically will not be considered until basic service is taken care of.

"Once we get that established then we can look at a beach service," he said.

Road project opposed

Protesters to soldier on despite six arrests on Friday

ROBYN YOUNG

robyn.young@metronews.ca

Joe Macdonnell and his neighbours will gather on a Chebucto Road lawn again this morning and wait for the sound of chainsaws.

They've had the week-end to think about the months and years that led up to the moment six people were arrested last Friday when they cried and clashed with police while a tree named Maple was chopped down, beginning the much-debated road-widening project.

With disappointment, Macdonnell said in the chaos that erupted during the protest, the most important point was lost.

Public attention focused on the arrests and how "ugly" the scene got, he said.

"But they (protesters) were here because they're concerned about what's happening," he said.

Carolyn King, also of the neighbourhood association, said the real ruckus began only when police refused to let community members have the first fallen tree.

City officials told the group that instead of tossing the trees into the wood chipper, they would hand them over to the community to chop into blocks as mementos or keepsakes. That message wasn't passed on to police.

Macdonnell said he doesn't blame police for having to do their job last week but neither does he blame the protesters who demonstrated to save his street.

The group says they blame the city for not properly acknowledging concerns Haligonians have been voicing for months.

"It's an absolute criminal waste of $3 million," said King, referring to the project that will add extra car lanes but no bus or bicycle lanes to the road.

And throughout all of the upset surrounding the road-widening controversy, King said, Mayor Peter Kelly has never once made a point of speaking to the people of Chebucto Road himself.

The neighbourhood association members said yesterday they will continue their fight to save the street as the project continues this week, but they'll emphasize the word "peaceful" to anyone who wants to join them.

Bluetooth not safer for cars: Researcher

lindsay.jones@metronews.ca

Just got your Bluetooth hooked up? Read on.

A Dalhousie University researcher says hands-free cellphones are no safer than hand-held cellphones. And they can even be more dangerous.

Ph.D. student Yoko Ishigami recently presented her review paper on the topic at the Canadian Association of Road Safety Professionals conference last month in Whistler, B.C. She was awarded first place in a national student paper competition.

Ishigami says research shows there's no difference in the reaction time of drivers using either hand-held or hands-free cell phones when they're confronted with unpredictable situations.

But there is difference in behaviour.

"When people use a hand-held phone, they tend to slow down and this is compensation behavior," said Ishigami, an interna-

ticket for talking

The cost of a ticket for talking on a cellphone while driving is $164.50 for first-time offenders, then $222 and a third time costs $337.

tional student from Japan studying experimental psychology.

"But people who are using hands-free tend not to slow down."

It's that extra confidence drivers feel when they use a Bluetooth on the road that makes them potentially more dangerous.

The research led her to conclude all cellphone use while driving should be banned.

India is the only country that bans both hand-held and hands-free cellphones.

On April 1, Nova Scotia banned driver use of hand-held cellphones.

As of late June, police had issued 144 tickets.

Transportation Department spokeswoman Cathy MacIsaac says the law will be reviewed after it's in place for six months.

'I am living my dream'

Paralympic athlete Connor, 31, sets sights on gold medal in Beijing

ALICIA FOX
for Metro Canada

Fate had seemingly made a wretched decision, but Calgarian paralympic athlete Earle Connor stood up and ran in the other direction — literally — with just one foot.

When he was three months old, Connor's parents had to make a tough decision: Subject their child to surgery every time he grew, or amputate his left leg. Born with a congenital condition that left his leg without a fibula, his parents decided to amputate his leg. The alternative, says the now 31-year-old, would have been very limiting, and would have confined him to a wheelchair. Instead, he took up sports.

"Beyond being an amputee, it was a way to express myself as a child," he said, describing himself as an eternal optimistic with a "huge slice of competitive."

Now the undefeated champion in the 100-metre dash, Connor will compete for Canada at the Beijing Paralympics.

It has been a long road to China for Connor, filled with tough lessons learned as a young athlete.

Another setback had Connor debating the end of his sporting career. In 2004 he failed a drug test because of personal, yet legal, medications he says that as a young man he was too embarrassed to admit he was taking.

"My own downfall is what I created," he said. Due to cancer concerns, a testicle had been removed and the testosterone patch he had been wearing to balance his hormones tipped his levels on the day of one test, weeks before he was to compete.

"I learned a very valuable lesson about taking ownership for who you are," Connor said.

He continues to challenge himself to be healthy and happy, remembering to have fun, and keeping balance in his life.

"If you don't have balance, you're really out of whack," he said.

After a two-year hiatus, the athlete, who proudly holds his undefeated streak since 1997, has three main goals.

"First and foremost is to win a gold medal in Beijing," he said, adding that's like "the A-plus on the term paper." He'd also like to beat his own world record of 12.14 seconds and run the race in under 12, which he said is an exhilarating accomplishment.

"(I'd like to) transcend into real life," said the newly married Connor, adding he's excited about the prospect of improving lives by working in the prosthetic industry.

But for now, "I really am totally living my dream," he said.

Nadal steals Federer's crown

Spaniard wins five-set epic to seal first Wimbledon championship

Rafael Nadal punched a mighty hole through Roger Federer's aura of invincibility yesterday to become the first Spaniard in over four decades to win the Wimbledon men's singles crown.

In one of the most nerve-jangling finals seen at the All England Club, Nadal survived two rain breaks and an astonishing Federer fightback to end the Swiss' five-year reign as Wimbledon champion with a thrilling 6-4, 6-4, 6-7, 6-7, 9-7 victory.

While Nadal emulated the 1966 feat of fellow Spaniard Manuel Santana, Federer's dreams of eclipsing Bjorn Borg and setting a modern-era record of six successive Wimbledon titles died after four hours and 48 minutes of heart-stopping action.

Nadal's astounding journey to win his first crown at the grasscourt grand slam began under cloudy skies and finished in near darkness.

The 22-year-old collapsed on to his back the moment Federer buried a forehand into the net on Nadal's fourth match point.

Rafael Nadal of Spain playfully takes a bite out of his trophy after defeating Roger Federer of Switzerland 6-4, 6-4, 6-7, 6-7, 9-7 yesterday in the Wimbledon men's final.

Dragging himself up from the turf, a tearful Nadal clambered through the stands to embrace his family and friends, who draped the red and yellow Spanish flag over his shoulders.

In a Wimbledon first, the Majorcan then strode across the commentary boxes on Centre Court to shake hands with Prince Felipe and Princess Letizia of Spain in the Royal Box and went on to exchange high fives with numerous fans in the stands.

"It's impossible to explain what I felt in that moment ... winning my favourite tournament, it's a dream," Nadal told the crowd after becoming the first man since Borg in 1980 to complete the Roland Garros-Wimbledon double in the same year.

Four weeks after humiliating Federer in the French Open final, Nadal demonstrated that the balance of power in men's tennis had shifted in his favour when he handed the Swiss his first grasscourt defeat in six years.

An utterly dejected Federer, though still world No. 1, could barely fathom his first major final defeat outside his three losses at Roland Garros.

"This is a disaster, Paris was nothing in comparison," said the 12-time grand slam champion, who had hoped to close in on Pete Sampras' overall record of 14 major titles.

On Saturday, Venus Williams survived a fierce onslaught from her sister Serena Williams to win her fifth Wimbledon singles title. The sisters then defeated Samantha Stosur and Lisa Raymond to claim the women's double title.

Toronto's Daniel Nestor and his partner Nenad Zimonjic defeated Jonas Bjorkman and Kevin Ullyett 7-6 6-7 6-3 6-3 to win the men's doubles title, helping Nestor complete a career grand slam. REUTERS

Emotions gets best of N.S. amateur champ

GOLF David Williamson was overcome with emotion, as the hard work to perfect his game over the past five years finally paid off.

The 23-year-old tearfully embraced his father and caddy, Michael, and his mother, Lorraine, after defeating Sean Hurley of Hartlen Point in a one-hole playoff to capture the Nova Scotia Golf Association men's amateur championship at Lingan Golf and Country Club in Sydney on Saturday.

Williamson last won a provincial event as an 18-year-old, when he captured the 2003 junior title.

"I've worked so hard on my game through college and didn't really play my best golf until I graduated last year," said the Halifax native. "I went down south for about three months in the spring to work on my game — I plan on turning professional in September.

"When you know you're playing well, to do it under pressure is the big thing. The emotion of the playoff was just a release to see the people that have been so instrumental in helping get me through that entire time and my folks are unbelievably supportive of me and my game ... It was hard to hold the tears back."

Williamson, Hurley, Ashburn's Trevor Chow and Lingan's Ryan Boutillier will compete at the Canadian championship from Aug. 10 to 14 in Lethbridge, Alta.

Program offers boost in being your own boss

JON TATTRIE
for Metro Halifax

Finding yourself out of work usually means looking for a new boss, but some view it as an opportunity to become their own boss.

If you're on Employment Insurance — or have been within the last 36 months — you can apply to the Self-Employment Benefits program facilitated by the Centre For Entrepreneurship, Education and Development (CEED). The free 40-week program teaches you how to start and run your own business, and lets you keep any money you earn on top of your EI payments.

As people are otherwise only allowed to earn 25 per cent of their EI before losing the rest dollar for dollar, this is a huge boost.

"It helps them stretch their cash flow out for 40 weeks," says Jason Wan, Self-Employment Benefits advisor at CEED's Halifax branch.

Paul MacMillan shows off some of the air-brushed artwork he hopes to turn into a business.

"The type of people who attend the program are people who have been working in their job for a long period and have recently been laid off, or who have been going from job to job," he adds. He also sees people coming off maternity leave and finding their job is no longer there.

Wan runs the two-day assessment course for those who referred to it by their EI case manager. The business-training program has 20 mandatory workshops on "hard skill" subjects like book-keeping, financing and legal issues. "Soft skills" such as health and wellness and work-life balance are also covered.

After the assessment, candidates submit an application to Service Canada. "Not everybody who applies gets in, but once people are in, the majority will graduate," Wan says.

Spryfield resident Paul MacMillan wants to start his own airbrushing business, RPM Air. "I've been painting cars for 18 years at car dealerships and it's just become monotonous," he explains. He started airbrushing for fun a few years ago and found he has a talent for it. "Now, I just love it."

Lawyers are in need of counsel, too

WorkplaceLaw

Daniel Lublin
dan@canadaemploymentlawyer.com

I love the tales from the workplace trenches. Those that I select to report are chosen based on a combination of their merit, law, skill — and sometimes error.

Hired as an associate lawyer by the law office of Leonard Levenscrown, for two years Sharon Johnston and her boss enjoyed a "father/daughter" relationship. Like most small law firms, the pair were close-knit and Johnston, the associate, depended on her boss for work. When financial troubles struck this office, it would have been no surprise that Johnston was dismissed for lack of work.

Shortly after her dismissal, however, their relationship changed for the worse. Incorrectly believing that Johnston filed a complaint against him at the Ministry of Labour, Levenscrown struck back, attempting to affect her reputation. Johnston responded by suing for wrongful dismissal.

Throughout the lawsuit and up until trial, Levenscrown first argued that he fired Johnston because of her performance and then at trial he then oddly said that she resigned. But the evidence disagreed with him: Levenscrown had initially helped Johnston look for another job, he had told another lawyer that he dismissed her because he didn't have enough work for her and he had provided documents indicating that she had been fired for that same reason.

Not amused with Levenscrown's hardball tactics, an Ontario judge recently found that his evidence simply wasn't credible and that Johnston's version of the events should be preferred instead. Johnston was awarded two months' salary for wrongful dismissal and her legal costs.

Courts can scrutinize an employer's actions and conduct at the time of dismissal. If unreasonable behaviour is viewed as extending an employee's period of unemployment, the court can award additional damages to compensate for the harm.

Although the court curiously declined to award Johnston additional damages, it cautioned like-minded employers that similar behaviour could lead to such a finding.

When it comes to workplace law, sometimes even lawyers need counsel. Employers should consider the following advice for handling dismissals:

- Raise performance issues or other allegations only if there is overwhelming evidence to support the argument being made.
- Zealously follow workplace policies the organization has in place. If none exist, create them.
- Provide a letter of dismissal, outlining the company's position and any offer of severance being made.
- Provide helpful letters of reference, instead of the simple name, rank and file letters currently in favour.
- Consider offering outplacement counselling, especially for older staff.

AGNS's 'greatest hits'

Art gallery offers another chance to see recent works

DEAN LISK

Art lovers who missed an opportunity to see Mathew Reichertz's ambitious series of paintings called The Fight — or works from other recent shows — will want to drop by the Art Gallery of Nova Scotia.

"This is like the greatest hits of contemporary arts we have done recently," the gallery's Jeff Gray said about Contemporaries.

This is the first show put together by new AGNS director Ray Cronin since he was officially named to the post late this spring.

"In some ways, it is about showing what his vision of the art gallery is," said Gray.

"This summer is about seeing the gallery again, and our collection again."

Highlights of the exhibit include a marble-version of a Styrofoam cooler by Halifax-based artist Thierry Delva — he had a solo show in the same space in 2005 — and drawings by Lucie Chan, who flooded the gallery with paper tears last year.

There is also a piece called The Race by Jena-Pierre Gauthier, where five measuring tapes with graphite attached to them move randomly up and down a wall, leaving one-of-a-kind drawings.

Another work on display is a sculpture of a polystyrene bicycle chained to a street sign. The bike's front wheel and seat are missing, and it looks like it might have had a run in with a

The piece is called Bully and was made by the same artist who created the polystyrene Zamboni which was a hit during the recent Arena: The Art of Hockey show.

"As someone pointed out to me, the piece is so fragile that if you were to actually touch it, you could destroy it, and that would make you the bully," said Gray.

Park a natural for Dream-y production

The forest plays a magical role in the play, so it only seems right to set the story in a park that plays a starring role in the city.

"This park has seen its fair share of tragedy and comedy and rebirth," said Jesse McLean. "It's been a theatre, in a different sense, for hundreds of years."

McLean is the director Shakespeare by the Sea's A Midsummer Night's Dream — The Bard's tale of multiple star-crossed lovers — which premieres in Point Pleasant Park this week.

"Not only do we have the ruins of the Cambridge Battery to serve as the city or castle, but you don't even have to move to have it set in the forest," said McLean.

"All you have to do is have the people in the castle leave and the people in the forest enter, and you've changed sets."

Among the actors appearing in this production is Raquel Duffy, who last performed with Shakespeare by the Sea in a production of this show 13 years ago.

"Shakespeare lends itself to being done outside," said Duffy.

She played Puck and Hermia more than a decade ago, and will now appear as Titania, the fairy queen.

"It is one of my favourite Shakespeare plays, and I didn't expect to be playing Titania yet in my life — but I feel ready to play it," she said.

McLean said this play is popular with many because it's one of Shakespeare's best structured — and has centuries of success to back it up.

"It is called a comedy, but it has romance, it has tragedy, it has adventure," he said. "It has everything, so people can pick and choose what they identify with in the story."

"You can set this play in space and it would probably still be a treat to watch."

The scene may have depicted the end of England's punk rock pioneers but it was just the beginning for then unknown Alejandro Escovedo.

He played guitar and co-wrote songs for The Nuns,

Escovedo remarks on this and other defining aspects of his musical life on the heavily autobiographical Real Animal, his tenth full-length album, which

His life changing events have covered a grand span. At 57, Escovedo has a plethora of personal and public adventures about which he speaks candidly on the album.

His experiences are what characterize his music and performance, from a near-fatal bout with Hepatitis C to appearing, to his discontent, on U.S. President George W. Bush's iPod playlist (he says he'd rather opt for Obama's).

Escovedo says it's music that has taken him to all these places, people and situations. "Without music, I don't know where I would be. It hasn't been easy but it's been a beautiful and joyous ride."

Man behind Bozo the Clown passes away

TELEVISION Larry Harmon, the alter ego behind Bozo the Clown for more than 50 years, died on Thursday of congestive heart failure at age 83, his spokesman said.

Harmon, a native of Ohio, died at his home in Los Angeles, his spokesman, Jerry Digney said. Harmon was not the original Bozo, but he portrayed the flame-haired clown in numerous appearances over the years.

More importantly, he purchased the copyright and trademark to the clown in the 1950s, and as a result was responsible for keeping Bozo working in the entertainment industry for more than half a century.

Over the years, Harmon trained some 200 actors to portray the clown for various local TV stations and other programs franchised around the country.

"We didn't have satellite, syndication and networking like today," Harmon once recalled. "So, I created my own network of local clowns and productions, a cross-country operation that kept me on the road for 50 weeks a year for decades."

Willard Scott, who went on to appear as the weatherman on NBC's weekday morning program Today, was one of those recruited by Harmon.

For a time, Harmon also ran a large animation studio in Hollywood, producing cartoons based on comedians Laurel and Hardy, as well as the characters Popeye and Mr. Magoo.

He is survived by his wife, son and four daughters.

South Park strikes again

WHY SOUTH PARK IS

ESSENTIAL, #57: Trey Parker and Matt Stone effectively had the last word on the Hollywood writers' strike earlier this year with Canada On Strike, the South Park episode that earned bonus points for being the latest totally gratuitous shot at this country by the Comedy Central show.

Where we once had to turn to old newsreels and clips of broadcast news shows to evoke and sum up an event in history (FDR declaring war on Japan, Walter Cronkite taking off his glasses after announcing the death of JFK), Canada On Strike will suffice to sum up precisely why the Writers Guild of America strike was an almost completely counterproductive exercise in poor bargaining with scant leverage. I can't wait to see what they'll do if the Screen Actors Guild goes on strike. On a more esoteric note, the next episode in the show's

12th season was a parody of Heavy Metal, the 1981 animated feature that still gives off a pungent aroma of bongwater and mildewed rec room for anyone who made the mortal mistake of being "there" when it was released, or during the long dark period when you could rely on finding a VHS copy of the film in any video rental store in the world. (Divining a unifying theme, Heavy Metal was voiced almost entirely by Canadians, including half the cast of SCTV.)

In a series of mini production featurettes on the South Park Studios web site, Parker, Stone and their animators go behind the scenes to describe how hard they worked to approximate the craptacular animation style of Major Boobage, their loving tribute to Heavy Metal.

They'll probably end up on the 12th season box set of the show, alongside the predictably risible "bonus features" Stone and Parker include with their DVD sets, so you'd might as well get your DVD burner fired up now.

HURTLING INTO THE 21st CENTURY, ONE WEB SITE AT A TIME:

In further writers' strike fallout, a web site was launched last week to showcase the work of writers affected by the WGA strike, with the solemn promise that whatever profits they realize — we're talking about the internet here, people — will go to the Actors Fund, which was set up to compensate crew members unemployed by the strike. Strike.tv was launched on the 4th of July with a teaser trailer promising work by writers from a dizzying array of shows, peppered by appearances by actual name actors — I was able to spot Kelly from The Office, two former James Bonds and Bob Newhart.

Precisely how Strike.tv intends to make money remains to be seen — will they be selling ads, or will the site take a cut of the money if one of the shows gets bought or optioned for movies or TV?

In any case, it seems a classic example of Hollywood backing into the future once again — possibly stumbling into the new business model it sorely needs without any idea of how exactly it got there.
